

Unbornness

The body developed out of us,
Not us out of the body.

We are bees

And our body is a honeycomb

We made the body

Cell by cell, we made it.

In our modern times, embryology often looks at the step by step physical development, from zygote to viable baby. But is this all there is to it? The above poem hints at another perspective.

In this course we will focus not so much on the physical development of an embryo but, rather, on the conditions and circumstances that led to a decision to become a human being, living a life on earth. Where were we before conception and who were we?

Rudolf Steiner tells us that we will never truly understand the whole human being until we are able to take into account and understand the terms “unbornness” and “immortality”:

Life after death –
Life before birth;
Only by knowing both
Do we know eternity.

—Rudolf Steiner
