The Art of Teaching

Rethinking Waldorf Curricula: A Structure for Renewal

February 24th

9:00 am to 2:00 pm Pacific Time

VIRTUAL Keynote & Plenary

IN-PERSON DISCUSSION with your own colleagues

ONSITE Social Land Art Activity at your school or centre

West Coast Institute is proud to present a professional development workshop that brings the best of virtual accessibility, and the irreplaceable experiential in-person learning with colleagues.

Join together, in person. with your faculty and/or sub regional or regional colleagues to explore Martyn Rawson's generative ideas around Waldorf pedagogy, participate in a social land art experience, and close with a harvest of Waldorf pedagogy from a renewed lens.

"The Waldorf movement to date has not really internationally worked out what the nature and status of its curriculum is, pulled between fidelity to its origins myth and the need to offer an education that is relevant to the students' culture..."

We cannot keep adding new content (e.g. new science, history, literature, technologies, materials, sources of energy) to the already full curriculum. This prompts the question, what to leave out? Which tried and tested classic main lessons should we scrap? Therefore, we need an approach to curriculum development that makes change possible but doesn't lose the essence of Waldorf education."
